Over the course of the past year, Ollie Webb Center, Inc. (OWCI) developed many innovative partnerships with educational districts and community organizations. One of the most exciting collaborations has been with the Lyons-Decatur Northeast School District in Burt County Nebraska and the Bray family. John and Gayle Bray own and operate a family farm and wanted their son James to learn and enhance his vocational and social skills by working on construction, maintenance, and cleanup projects. OWCI’s Supported Employment and Continuing Education teams worked together with the school district and the family to make this dream a reality.

Fred Hansen, Superintendent of Lyons-Decatur Northeast School District shared this testimonial about the partnership with OWCI. “Ollie Webb did a great job of creating an individualized plan that met not only our student’s needs but also tailored it to his wants. They went the extra mile to be flexible and made sure they collected accurate and up-to-date information to help them construct a program that was the best fit for our student. Ollie Webb does a good job collecting data and communicating progress that our student is making as well as keeping us informed of his current needs.”

Mike Loftus, OWCI Education Coordinator and James began working on comprehension, word definitions, and other curriculum related to vocational skills and success in the workplace. This included exploring areas of work interest, strengths, and aptitudes as well as learning the keys to successfully maintain employment. How-to videos on a variety of projects that required a wide range of tools and equipment were also introduced as James demonstrated an incredible ability to watch a single How-to video and immediately apply this knowledge to a real-world farm project.

In early October, James, his father, and Mike undertook their most challenging project to date, one that is still in progress: a chicken coop that will be erected and used beginning in April 2018. This project has helped James learn and practice how to shingle a roof and build a basic wood frame, use a staple gun to affix metal mesh to a base, and attach hinges to a flap door for egg retrieval. James’ parents have been actively involved in this positive collaboration enabling him to learn critical skills which John and Gayle hope will help James live and work as independently as possible in the future.

HAND IN HAND

“A day of unity and self-advocacy with Project II”

History of Hand In Hand:
For many years, Creighton University hosted Hand in Hand as a celebration of inclusion and unity between Ollie Webb Center, Inc. members and University students. In the spirit of giving back, they dedicated their afternoon to friendship and activities. 2017 was the last year Creighton could host such an event so the torch was passed to Project II. Self-advocates are excited to call it a day of unity among self-advocates and community members and provide a lot of the same fun activities. Part of the proceeds from the event will further the group's fundraising efforts to keep raising awareness and advocating in our great community. Thank you, Project II for taking this on!
